Introduction

Welcome

This book started because most of our family recipes were not written down. Those that were, often had misleading or blatantly incorrect instructions. Those that were correct, were still cryptic asking for “enough flour to make dough the right consistency”. A particularly good example is Breakfast Cookies (See page 63) which required “2 heaping teaspoons” of baking powder. First, these were not standard teaspoons, but kitchen serving teaspoons. The heap is supposed to be so large that it almost cannot be removed from the container. After some precise measurements with a scale, I found that these “teaspoons” were 3 times larger than a standard teaspoon.

I hope to slowly standardise the recipes and make the quantities sound. It is best to assume all quantities, if even present, are subject to judgement and revision. If you make a discovery about a quantity, please tell me and I will change this book.

Some recipes are marked • meaning I have not made them, but they seem sound even though they came from the Internet. Some recipes are marked with ‡. These are undoubtedly family recipes lacking quantities, having incorrect quantities, or having missing information. If you make one of these, please accurately measure the ingredients and help me update this book.

Preparation

This has been typeset using L^AT_EX, using custom recipe environments. The cover graphic was made in Inkscape. Revision control is done through Subversion.

Conversion Hints

It is good to know that:

$$\begin{array}{l} 3 \text{ tsp} = 1 \text{ tbsp} = \frac{1}{2} \text{ oz} = \frac{1}{16} \text{ cup} \\ 1 \text{ cup} = 8 \text{ oz} = \frac{1}{4} \text{ qt} = 250 \text{ mL} \end{array}$$

In this book, no distinction is made between fluid ounces and avoirdupois ounces (mass) in writing. I hope to eventually replace all ounces with either grams or mL.

Aromatic Combinations

Name	Origin	Ingredient Ratio
Mirepoix	French	2 cup onion : 1 cup carrot : 1 cup celery
Mirepoix blanc	French	1 cup onion : 1 cup parsnip : 1 cup celery
Battuto	Italian	bacon : garlic : onion : parsley : carrot : celery : green peppers (optional)
Sofrito	Spanish	head of garlic : 2 cup bell peppers : 1 cup tomatoes : bunch of cilantro : small bunch of parsley
Trinity	Cajun	2 cup onion : 1 cup green pepper : 1 cup celery
–	Chinese	scallion : garlic : ginger : chili peppers

Aromatics generally form the basis of a dish, especially a soup or stew. They are usually sautéed with butter, oil, the fat render from the meat in the dish, or a combination. There is some flexibility and one aromatic combination may be substituted for another to change the flavour of a dish without leaving a “hole”.

Flour Types

The seed of a plant contains three parts: the germ, the plant embryo; the bran, the hard outer shell; and the endosperm, the starch storage for the plant. All flours can be categorized by which of these they contain, how finely they are milled, and the source plant. Some flours go through bleaching to change the colour. There are different kinds of wheat: hard and soft. Hard, or winter, wheat contains a lot of protein, while soft, or spring wheat, contains less protein. Durum wheat is a specific strain of hard wheat. The different combinations are better at different tasks.

Potato Types

Name	Class
Russet	Mealy
Goldrush	Mealy
Long White	Mealy
Idaho	Mealy
Yukon Gold	In-between
Peruvian Blue	In-between
Superior	In-between
Kennebec	In-between
Kathdin	In-between
Red-skinned	Waxy
White	Waxy
Crescent	Waxy
Yellow	Waxy

A cured potato has a thick skin while a new potato has a thin one. Normally, “new potatoes” are new white potatoes.

Potatoes (Solanum tuberosum) and sweet potatoes (Ipomoea batatas) are only distantly related. Although sweet potatoes are called “yams”, that refers to a more distantly related plant, Dioscorea sp. Sweet potatoes are actually most closely related to common morning glories (Ipomoea purpurea). They are usually acceptable substitutes for potato, except for the skin, as the “in-between” type.

Class	Uses
Mealy	Baking
	Mashing
	French fries
	Baking
In-between	Gnocchi
	Perogies
Waxy	Soups and Stews
	Salad
	Casseroles
	Roasting
	Barbecuing

In-between varieties can do the jobs of mealy or waxy potatoes, but not as well. Mealy potatoes become light and fluffy when cooked, but tend to fall apart. Waxy potatoes keep their shape, but become lumpy when mashed. Yukon Gold is particularly good for gnocchi and perogies because it can be mashed smoothly (like a mealy potato), but does not absorb much water (like a waxy potato).

Pastry Methods

Most doughs fall into one of the following methods. Although some recipes vary, most will be roughly the same and making changes will produce predictable results (e.g., creaming more in the cake method will produce fluffier cake). If you have a “recipe” which is only a list of ingredients, just apply the appropriate method.

When fats are involved, different recipes will require fat as a liquid, soft solid, or hard solid. If the fat is an oil or melted, treat it as a liquid. If it is “softened” or room-temperature, it is usually worked in to dry flour and allowed to coat the flour to create a tender dough. If it is cold, it will create layers in between bits of flour to create a flaky texture. In this final case, having a metal pan in the freezer can be a way to quickly chill dough if it heats up during working. Some doughs, like pie crust, will have some soft solid and some hard solid to be both tender and flaky.

The Muffin Method

The muffin method is often used to prepare muffins and quick-breads.

1. Combine the dry ingredients. Usually, sifting is suggested. Sifting can be replaced by a trip through a food processor or vigorous whisking.
2. Combine the liquid ingredients and the eggs.
3. Melt the fat and add to the liquid ingredients.
4. Combine the wet and dry ingredients with a minimum of stirring. It will be lumpy and there will be some bits of dry ingredients.

Excessive stirring will cause the over-development of gluten. This would result in a smaller, less tender muffin with tunnels and a peaked crust.

The Biscuit Method

The biscuit method is used to prepare biscuits and dumplings.

1. Combine the dry ingredients.
2. Combine the liquid ingredients and the eggs.
3. Cut the fat into the flour mixture until the mixture has a coarse texture.
4. Combine the wet and dry ingredients. Be careful not to over-mix. Once a ball of dough forms, it can be kneaded briefly.

Cutting the fat into the flour will cause layers to form through the dough. These layers are what makes a biscuit flaky. Again, be aware that over-working the dough will result in biscuits that are less tender and flaky than they should be.

The Cake or Creaming Method

The cake method is used mainly for cookies and cakes.

1. Cream the fat and sugar together.
2. Beat the eggs then add to fat and sugar mixture and beat well.
3. Add the sifted dry ingredients alternately with the liquid ingredients, beginning and ending with the dry ingredients. After each addition, stir to combine the ingredients then beat briefly.
4. Fold in any flavourings, fruits, and nuts.

Creaming the fat with the sugar and then with the eggs incorporates a lot of air, making the final product fluffy. While over-beating is still a possibility, the fat will help to prevent tough gluten from forming.

The Bread Method

The bread method is used for most yeast risen breads, pizza dough, pretzels, and cinnamon buns.

1. Bloom yeast, if using active-dry yeast, using some warm water and sugar. The sugar should only be about 1 tbsp per 1 cup water.
2. Combine the dry ingredients. If using volumetric measurements, reserve some of the flour.
3. Combine the liquid ingredients.
4. Add yeast to liquid ingredients.
5. Stir until stiff.
6. Knead until dough passes the window pane test. The test is performed by gently stretching the dough. If the dough can be stretched thin enough for light to pass through without tearing, the dough is done. If the dough is too sticky, the reserved flour can be added sparingly; a dough which is too moist is usually better than a dough which is too dry. Over-kneading is possible, but nearly impossible by hand and unlikely using a mixer.

7. Let “ferment” (first rise), usually, until doubled in bulk. This takes, in most recipes, 1 to 2 hours. Sometimes, this step is done in a refrigerator, in which case it is “retarded” and this takes over night.
8. “Turn” (deflate or punch-down) the dough by folding the dough like a letter and flattening with finger tips. The purpose is not to remove every gas bubble from the bread.
9. Let “proof” (second rise). This rise may also be “retarded”.
10. Infrequently, the dough maybe turned and proofed again. Each subsequent cycle will take longer than the previous one.

Yeast Types

For bread baking, most commonly used yeast is Saccharomyces cerevisiae, commonly called baker's yeast or brewer's yeast. It is capable of digesting many sugars as a food source including the maltose produced by the break down of starch in the flour. The types of yeast below are listed from most potent to least potent. The can all be substituted for one another if the quantity is adjusted. If too much yeast is added, the final product will taste of yeast and too little will rise prohibitively slowly. Yeast grow optimally at 30 °C and will die if exposed to temperatures greater than 40 °C.

Compressed Yeast – Yeast is sold in a beige block which is firm to the touch but crumbles when pressed. Also referred to as live yeast, fresh yeast, or a yeast cake. It has a short shelf life of only a month in the fridge and risks growing mould. It can be frozen, ideally in a deep freezer and should not be defrosted repeatedly. It can be crumbled directly into dough or dissolved in water. A “cube” is 25 g.

Instant Yeast – Yeast is sold in granules that have a very long shelf life. The most common brand is Fleischmann's. Also referred to as Rapid-Rise or Quick-Rise. It does not need to be “activated” before use, but it should be dissolved in water. Activating it does no harm. It can be stored unopened for 1 year; once opened, 3 months if stored in the fridge or 6 months in the freezer.

Active Dry Yeast – Yeast is sold in granules that have a fairly long shelf life. Instant yeast has effectively replaced active dry. One can be substituted for the other, but less instant is required. Yeast must be “activated” by mixing with warm sugar water and allowing to stand for 10 minutes. It can be stored unopened for 1 year; once opened, 3 months if stored in the fridge or 6 months in the freezer.

Sourdough Starter – Naturally occurring yeast, usually Saccharomyces cerevisiae, Saccharomyces exiguus, and/or Candida sp., and lactic acid bacteria are present in a piece of dough. Also referred to as a sponge. The starter is “fed” and some is used for baking and some is reserved for future use. Starter can be kept in the fridge for months if no mould grows, but is ideally fed at least every other week. If substituting, some of the water and flour in the recipe must be substituted for starter. If more than half of the water comes from the starter, the final bread will be sour.

Conversion can be done as follows:

- Instant → Compressed : $\times 3$
- Active Dry → Compressed : $\times 2.5$
- Instant → Active Dry : $\times 1.25$

Osmotolerant yeast is a type of yeast bred to survive the high osmolarity (i.e., high sugar and salt concentrations) of sweet breads. Other forms of yeast will not raise the bread sufficiently without imparting a yeast flavour due to a need for more yeast to be added. It can be purchased in the US in an instant form.

General Tips

- Water in a stainless steel pot should be salted after boiling as the salt will corrode and pit the metal.
- Before making a substitution, consult The Cook's Thesaurus (<http://www.foodsubs.com/>).
- There are two kinds of ice-cream: New York-style and Philadelphia-style. New York-style has a custard (i.e., egg base) and is cooked. Philadelphia-style has no eggs and is usually uncooked. The difference gives New York-style a very rich and heavy flavour while Philadelphia-style is usually more light and fruity.

Pasta Specific Tips:

- Dishes from the “Pasta” category must be served immediately, while dishes in the “Pasta Sauce” can be made ahead of time and frozen.
- When removing meat from pasta sauce, a small well of pasta water should be added to “rinse” the meat as it is being removed.
- When dressing pasta Nonna-style, toss the pasta with half the cheese and half the tomato sauce, put into individual dishes, sprinkle remaining cheese and ladle remaining sauce on top. Adding sauce with cheese on top is “ristorante”-style.
- If substituting canned tomatoes, diced tomatoes are equivalent to tomato pieces in most recipes and crushed tomatoes are equivalent to purée.
- Rice may be substituted for pasta in many dishes by boiling the Arborio rice in a large volume of salted water.

Bread Specific Tips:

- To raise bread faster, put the bread in a cold oven with a bowl or pot of boiled water. Reheat the water when it cools.
- To make a firmer crust on breads, increase the oven temperature and steam the oven by cracking the door and wetting the sides of the oven with a spray bottle of water or dropping ice cubes in a pan with rocks.
- The oven should be preheated 50 °F above the target temperature to compensate for the heat lost when the oven door is opened to insert the bread.
- Starter, whisked down, has a density of 300 g per 1 cup.
- According to Alton Brown, bread should be cooked until it reaches an internal temperature of 207 °F. Any higher than 210 °F and the water inside the bread will boil causing the bread to boil. Lower than 205 °F will result in under cooked yeasty-flavoured bread. Times are suggestions based on experience before cooking by temperature or for recipes where inserting a temperature probe is not practical. Any recipes where bread is not cooked to 207 °F are explicitly labelled. If a bread has reached 207 °F but the crust is not dark enough, decrease oven temperature by 50 °F and watch that the internal temperature does not exceed 210 °F. The temperature probe should not be inserted until the crust forms. Allow the bread to bake for 10 minutes before inserting the meat thermometer.
- Starter should be grown in glass, plastic, or stainless steel vessels.
- Malt extract syrup and malt extract powder can be interchanged. Malt syrup is 20% water and the powder has no water. Adjust the water in the recipe appropriately.

Emergency Tips:

- If the oven is not working, place a cake in a large pot raised off the bottom using a metal rack, trivet, or jar lids. Add water to the pot and steam the cake. Cook for the usual length of time.
- If you do not have an ice cream maker, you can freeze the ice-cream solid, cut it into cubes, and use a blender to liquefy the cubes, then freeze the mixture. This method will never produce ice crystals as small as a real ice-cream maker, but the final product will be fairly smooth.

Toasting Nuts

1. Preheat oven to 325 °F.
2. Place nuts in a baking pan and bake for 8 to 10 minutes, or until lightly brown (Pine nuts need only 6 to 8 minutes).
3. To skin hazelnuts, let the toasted nuts cool for 1 to 2 minutes, then rub the still-warm nuts between the palms of your hands, layers of a kitchen towel, or paper towels, letting the papery skins flake away.

Pseudo-frying

From America's Test Kitchen.

This is meant as a substitute to breading and frying in oil. The heating in hot oil causes Maillard reactions to brown and flavour the coating. This method recreates that flavour without using much oil.

Use the same type of bread crumbs or coating and the same type of meat, fish, or vegetable in the original recipe. Because of the reduced quantity of oil, use the same oil in the original recipe or a better one.

Ingredients:

- oil
- bread crumbs
- meat

1. Preheat the oven to 300 °F.
2. In a frying pan, heat a tiny amount of oil and bread crumbs.
3. On medium-low heat, stir the bread crumbs constantly until toasted to a light brown.
4. Let cool.
5. Coat meat in bread crumbs in the way described in the recipe.
6. Place on a wire rack pan.
7. Bake.
8. Finish the way described in the recipe.

Chapter 1

Beef

Braised Stew Template

From Andre Masella and Alton Brown.

This is less of a recipe and more of a guide to make a stew by braising.

Ingredients:

- stewing beef (the cheapest possible cut)
- braising liquid (generally any combination of: aromatic vegetables, wine, vinegar, tomato paste. The meat will release water, so the mixture can be more of a paste than a liquid.)
- herbs and spices
- salt
- vegetables
- butter
- flour

1. Season meat liberally with herbs and spices.
2. If desired, marinate in braising liquid overnight.
3. If marinated, drain, reserving braising liquid, and pat meat dry.
4. Heat a skillet very hot without oil.
5. Place cubes of beef on the skillet and let each side brown thoroughly.
6. Combine beef and braising liquid in an oven-safe lidded pot or a foil packet.
7. Place in a cold oven.
8. Heat oven to 250 °F.
9. Bake for 4 hours, checking occasionally.
10. Separate meat, braising liquid, and solids in braising liquid.

11. Pour braising liquid in a narrow container and refrigerate.
12. Refrigerate solids separately.
13. Let meat cool for 1 hour.
14. Refrigerate meat separately.
15. When the meat has firmed, remove it from the fridge.
16. Using shears, cut the meat into pieces of the desired size and trim away any fat and gristle.
17. Remove the solidified fat from the braising liquid.
18. Heat some of the fat in a large pot. If insufficient, add oil.
19. Sauté vegetables until desired consistency. Use separate batches if desired.
20. Wipe out inside of pot.
21. Microwave braising liquid until warm.
22. Melt butter in pot.
23. Whisk in an equal volume of flour to form a roux. Whisk quickly; add flour slowly.
24. Continue whisking until flour has become golden brown.
25. While whisking very quickly, slowly add the braising liquid to form a gravy.
26. Add vegetables and meat and stir to distribute.
27. Remove from heat.
28. Allow to stand for 10 minutes.

The browning in the first step provides most of the “meat” flavour. Ensure the skillet is very hot. Preheat it for at least 5 minutes on an electric stove or 3 minutes on a gas stove.

The connective tissue in the meat, collagen, will be broken down by the slow heating and converted to gelatin. The stove top does not provide adequate temperature control to braise. The cheapest meat has the most connective tissue.

Chilling the meat allow the gelatin to set up like a gelatin dessert. This simply makes handling easier.

The braising liquid traditionally contains aromatic vegetables, but this is not necessary. A set of aromatic vegetables (e.g., mirepoix) can be split between the braising liquid and the stew vegetables.

14. On a heavily floured surface, roll in ropes $\frac{3}{4}$ " diameter.
15. Cut ropes into pillows 1" long.
16. Shape into gnocchi using a floured grooved gnocchi board or fork. To shape:
 - (a) Using two to three floured fingers, press a pillow near the bottom edge of the board starting just above the bottom edge of the pillow.

 - (c) When the pillow has been almost completely dragged, release it.
17. If desired, lay out on a floured cookie sheet, freeze for $\frac{1}{2}$ hour, then dump in a bag, and return to freezer. Cook without defrosting.
18. Boil in salted water for 5 to 7 minutes. For large quantities, cook small batches.

The potatoes must be boiled in their skins to prevent excess water absorption.

Do not let finished pasta sit more than 1½ hours before boiling. It is better to freeze them or at least refrigerate them.

Ensure that all surfaces and the gnocchi are well-floured.

Maccarunë a fiérrë

Ingredients:

- 100 g fine semolina flour per person, or 50 g each coarse semolina and all-purpose flour
- 53 g hot tap water per person

1. Sift flour.
2. Make a well and add water.
3. Knead until dough just comes together.
4. Divide dough into pieces.
5. Knead by folding the piece and rolling in to a rope repeatedly until it is smooth.
6. Roll out the rope until it is $\frac{1}{4}$ " thick.
7. Divide into 6" lengths.
8. Dust with flour.
9. Shape ropes into maccarunë. To shape:
 - (a) Place the rod at an angle to the dough so the right tip of the rope meets the rod a few inches from the right end of the rod.
 - (b) Hold the left end of the rod between the thumb and forefinger.
 - (c) Using the base of the right thumb, roll the dough into the rod applying light pressure at the point of winding. The coils should just touch.
 - (d) Periodically, use the left hand to move the rod back to the starting position.
 - (e) With light pressure, roll the rod back and forth with the heels of the hands on the dough. This will thin dough.
 - (f) Cradle the dough with the left hand holding the rod with the thumb and forefinger just beyond the right edge of the dough.
 - (g) Use the right hand to remove the rod, releasing the dough.
10. Allow pasta to dry for at least $\frac{1}{2}$ hour.
11. Cook in boiling, salted water until tender.

The rod, the fiérrë, is a 12"-long piece of $\frac{1}{16}$ " key stock. Key stock can be purchased from most industrial fastener vendors. I found it at Spaenaur in Kitchener as part number 131-450.

This process can be made easier by flattening the dough in a pasta maker and, slicing it into wide strips, and then rolling the strips on to the fiérrë. This is much faster and produces much more even pieces of pasta, but they are more likely to uncurl.

 - (d) With fingers vertical, drag the dough maintaining constant distance from the work surface until the piece is released.
 - (e) Flick the finished piece off of the work surface on to a floured cookie sheet.
12. Cook in boiling, salted water until tender.

The adjacent fingers should squeeze the edges of the pasta in to form the characteristic shell shape.

Tagliatelle

- 55 g hot tap water per person

5. Divide into slices and press in 4" discs, $\frac{3}{4}$ " thick.
6. Dredge in flour.
7. Put through the largest notch of a pasta maker 5 to 6 times, folding, rotating and dredging each time until edges are smooth.
8. Put through progressively smaller slots until pasta is just thin enough for light to pass through. Flour as needed to prevent sticking.
9. Flour both surfaces of strips.
10. Let dry approximately $\frac{1}{2}$ hour.
11. Run through slicing slot of pasta machine.
12. Dry for another $\frac{1}{2}$ hour.
13. Cook in salted boiling water for 2 to 3 minutes. Adding a small quantity of vegetable oil to the water will control the foam.

The right kind of flour is a finely milled durum wheat flour. This can be hard to find. Most Italian 00 flours are suited to the job; rimacinata is a finely middle 00 flour. If unavailable, mix equal parts coarse semolina and all-purpose flour and sifted together.

Kneading can be done in a stand mixer for approximately 15 minutes. The dough will come together very slowly because it is dry.

The pasta freezes extremely well. Place dried pasta on trays, freeze for a few hours, then place into bags and keep frozen.

This dough can be used and shaped in other ways. For lasagna, keep sheets whole. For papardalle/tappareddë, dredge sheets in flour, roll into a loose flat coil, cut with a knife into strips 1 cm-wide. For maltagliati, cut into 2 cm-wide strips using a pizza cutter, then cross cut on diagonal into lozenge shapes.

Chapter 34

Sourdough

Refreshing the Starter

Ingredients:

- S g starter
- water
- unbleached white flour

1. Determine the recipes to be made tomorrow.
2. Get a calculator.
3. Sum the total amount of starter called for by the recipes in grams (M g).
4. If $M < \frac{2}{3}S$, steal what is needed from the fridge stock and add $S - M$ extra next time. Proceed directly to the bread recipe.
5. Dissolve the starter in $\frac{1}{2}M - \frac{1}{3}S$ g water.
6. Whisk until frothy.
7. Stir in $\frac{1}{2}M - \frac{1}{3}S$ g flour.
8. Let stand $1.4\frac{M}{S} + 4$ hours until beginning to fall.
9. Remove the starter needed for the recipes.
10. Dissolve the remaining starter in $\frac{1}{3}S$ g water.
11. Whisk until frothy.
12. Stir in $\frac{1}{3}S$ g flour.
13. Store remaining starter in the fridge.

For example, if there 300 g starter and 300 g is needed for a recipe, add 50 g each flour and water, wait 6 hours, take 300 g starter for bread, add 100 g each flour and water, and refridgerate.

This “batter” starter is maintained at 100% hydration (i.e., equal masses of flour and water). “French” or firm starters are typically maintained at 60-65% hydration. If you need M g firm starter, make $\frac{3}{4}M$ g batter starter, knead in $\frac{1}{4}M$ g flour, and allow to rise. In general, for any hydration h , make $\frac{2h}{1+h}M$ g batter starter and knead in $\frac{1-h}{1+h}M$ g flour.

It is best to keep $S = 300$ g of starter in the fridge. Occasionally, measure the starter before the refreshing and compensate for any changes in mass.

Most city water is now treated with chloramine which kills the yeast. The starter will become progressively less active when grown on chloraminated water. It is not practical to remove it by filtration. Use bottled spring water.

Pennsylvania Dutch Hard Pretzels

Makes 14.

Ingredients:

- 88 g sourdough starter
- 8 g salt
- 20 g malt powder or malt syrup
- 220 g water
- 352 g flour
- 15 g lye
- coarse salt

1. Combine starter, salt, malt, water, and flour and knead until smooth and elastic.
2. Let rise for 8 hours.
3. Divide into 50 g pieces and round.
4. Let rest 15 minutes.
5. On a lightly floured surface, roll each piece into a rope that is ½" in the middle third and ¼" for third nearest each end. If the rope is too thick, the pretzel will not dry during baking and will be tough.
6. Shape each rope into a pretzel shape and lay on a flour-dusted couche. The thinner ends of the rope should mean that the main backbone of the pretzel and the middle are approximately the same diameter. Make sure there is plenty of space in the holes of each pretzel. If they close up during rising, they will not dry during baking.
7. Let rise for 6 to 8 hours, until doubled in bulk.
8. Preheat oven to 550 °F.
9. Fill a stainless steel pot with 3 cup of water.
10. While wearing rubber gloves, add lye to water. Always add lye to water; never water to lye.
11. Heat lye mixture until all lye dissolves and mixture is warm. It does not need to come to a boil.
12. Prepare a peel or inverted sheet pan by placing a sheet of parchment paper down and then liberally salting the paper with coarse salt.
13. Working in batches, place pretzels in the lye bath for 10 seconds, then flip, then wait another 10 seconds, then transfer to the parchment.
14. Sprinkle coarse salt on top of the pretzels.
15. Bake for 10 minutes on a pizza stone.
16. Remove from the oven and peel pretzels off of the parchment paper.

17. Reduce temperature to oven to 300 °F.
18. Return pretzels to oven (either directly on the stone or on a sheet pan).
19. Bake for 1 to 1½ hours until pretzels are hard when pressed firmly.

This recipe is a hybrid of information from tours of Martin's and Hammond's pretzel factories.

If making multiple batches, keep the oven at 550 °F and do the 10 minute bake for all batches, then reduce temperature and perform the second bake. It is not a problem if the pretzels cool between bakes.

Pizza Crust

6. Roll and stretch the dough into a circle.
7. Cover and allow to rise for 2 hours.
8. Preheat oven to 400 °F.
9. Brush the dough with some olive oil and layer with toppings.
10. Bake until golden brown on the bottom and the top is bubbly. Approximately 15 minutes.

- 145 g starter

- 30 g butter
- 30 g shortening
- 5 g baking soda

2. Scald, stirring frequently to control foaming.
3. Let cool.
4. Combine above mixture with all ingredients except flour and mix thoroughly.
5. Add flour to make a firm dough and knead until dough passes the window pane test.
6. Allow to rise until doubled in bulk.
7. Turn, round, and place in a greased round cake pan. (Ideally, the pan should have a lip.)
8. Allow to rise until doubled in bulk, just before dough overflows the pan.
9. Preheat oven to 350 °F.
10. Brush with egg wash.
11. Bake for 40 minutes, or until an internal temperature of 207 °F is reached.

The total water-type liquid content must be 190 g. Since the juice from a lemon and orange varies, extract all the juice, then add water so that the final weight of the liquid is correct.

*This recipe is derived from Peter Reinhart's The Bread Baker's Apprentice.*

Scalding is necessary to neutralise proteases in the juice and milk. Otherwise, the texture will be crumbly.

Baking soda is necessary to reduce the acidity of the juice. Otherwise, the dough will be slow to rise and the crumb will not have a soft, uniform texture.

grigne (GREEN-yuh) — The slash marks in the top of a loaf of bread.

pëpparulë (peh-pa-ROOL) — Sweet red pepper flakes. Substitute paprika.

squiccëlä (skwi-CHEH-leh) — The arbitrary amount of oil needed by recipes that do not specify a quantity of oil. Approximately 1 to 3 tbsp.

Stealing Recipes

My grandparents cook without recipes. Getting them to give you a recipe is almost impossible; even getting a list of ingredients can prove challenging. I have gained experience in how to extract recipes from them. I will share my secrets and describe my method.

Invitation

The only way to get the recipe is to watch them do it and observe what they do and write it all down.

The first decision to make is location. There are pros and cons to doing it in their kitchen versus yours. In their kitchen they have the tools they are used to. They may have a favourite cup to measure flour or be able to estimate in their pans. Taking them out of their element will be disruptive to their cooking. However, they will often focus more in your kitchen. I know my grandparents are constantly working on many things at once. It becomes unclear if something is sitting on the counter because it needs to sit or because something else needs attention.

If you are going to do it in their home, you're going to need to bring some of your own tools. I recommend the following:

Notebook and pen — This is where you will write down your observations. I find that writing on papers gets lost, so I have a section of a notebook dedicated to this. A smaller notebook is better since it will be more unobtrusive when working. Make sure it is reasonably rugged since it will get covered in food.

Calibrated Measuring Devices — If my grandmother says she has teaspoons, she means the things you stir your tea with, not the calibrated measuring spoons. Bring some of those and some cups.

Scale and calculator — Measuring by weight is the best way to reduce variability in the recipe. Since there will probably be arithmetic involved to make use of the scale's amounts, I suggest a calculator.

Funky Hardware — If the dish requires some funky hardware, like the board for gnocchi, the fierrè for mac-carunè, bring it to have it approved. If you don't have one of these thingies, you should start looking. They will probably tell you they got theirs from Old Country before the war, so you'll have to find an equivalent. You'd be amazed what is available at restaurant supply stores. Also, ethnic stores, Chinatown, dollar stores, and hardware store all might carry the thing you need or something functionally equivalent. Be warned, they'll never know it by the same name, so you must browse. You can also try the Google. Another person may have posted this question to a forum. Sometimes, you have to really think: I could not find a fierrè, a small square rod, to make mac-carunè, so I went to talk to a machinist and he told me to look for key stock. That was easy to find.

Watch — For timing, since they don't.

Instant-Read Thermometer — This is not always necessary, but for frying, it's nice to know the oil temperature. It can also be useful for certain meats, but since my grandparents like to overcook meat, I don't bother. It is probably useful in stove-top braising, poaching, and other sub-boiling techniques.

Everything is Important

Assume everything they do is important. Most of it isn't. In fact, much of it is probably pointless. For now, get it all down. If you can make this dish multiple times and take an average, so much the better. This is an important distinction: don't write anything they tell you. Write what you observe. They may tell you things that are misleading or just plain wrong. It's probably not intentional. If you want to write it down, note that it was not observed.

Be as precise as possible. If you know the cooking vocabulary, use it. Putting oil and garlic in a pan can be a sauté or a sweat depending on the temperature. If you don't know the difference, write down what setting the stove is at. Does the garlic blister? colour? Is it covered in oil? Is it in a shallow pan? non-stick pan? Is the garlic minced? crushed? halved? Imagine describing it to someone who is not in the room.

Take every opportunity to do instead of watch. If dough is involved, touch it, squeeze it, and stretch it. If dough is not something you handle frequently, bring some modeling clay or cheese wax and try to describe the dough relative to those.

Examine ingredients thoroughly. Write down brand names and, if you aren't familiar with them, find out where they get them. My grandmother has very specific rules about which brands of flour she uses for what. She doesn't understand why, but some are better. What she is really looking for is the amount of protein in the flour. Robin Hood All-Purpose flour has lower protein content than Five Roses All-Purpose, making the Robin Hood better suited to cake and pastry and the Five Roses to pasta. Ask if they always use this brand.

How to Measure

Measuring ingredients is hard. If you have a scale, I would measure everything by weight. Even if you want a recipe by volume, a scale is convenient because you can shove it under their work bowl and just keep measuring. If you are measuring by volume, you'll just have keep shoving cups under their hands and measuring before they drop it into the bowl. My grandmother's pasta was particularly annoying because she would make it too wet, then add flour, then it would be too dry and she would add more water. My solution for that particular recipe was the weigh the bag of flour before and after and weigh the dough at the end. Then I could calculate the amount of flour and water in the dough.

Measuring time is fairly easy. Just remember to do it.

Quantifying the Measurements

The question I ask most frequently is "what are you looking for?". That is the golden question. This is most important during the cooking. Given they don't time, what are they looking for? Is it the colour? smell? cracks? puffing? This is also important in doughs and batters. How do you know it is kneaded enough? stickiness? smoothness? colour?

If you are learning a technique, after you've rolled or folded a few whatevers, describe what you are doing to them in different words and see that they are satisfied. This can be especially important if there is a language barrier.

Don't ask why. They probably don't know or their answer is wrong.

Fixing the Recipe

Once you have observed it, come home and immediately rewrite it in a “standard” recipe format. Do any calculations you need for your ingredients. If you measured in weight but want volume, use your scale to convert by measuring the same weight in a calibrated container. If there is a strange technique, like rolling maccarunë, write it down in a detailed set of steps. Draw pictures if it helps. It is important to do this while it is fresh in your mind.

Try to make it. Make it with all the strange and seemingly pointless steps. If you get something pretty darn close, you may begin whittling; if not, make it again and, if that fails, observe again. There is also a lot of variability in their cooking. If it consistently comes out to watery, assume your measurement is off and decrease it.

The recipe at this point is full of seemingly useless steps or things that are way too complicated. Pick something that seems illogical or laborious and change it. If your change works, keep it. Keep whittling down the recipe until you think it is manageable. In some recipes, I have taken the opposite approach. I have stripped the recipe down to what I think are essential steps and added steps back. Some steps require patience to get right. After years, we are still learning how to make a frittata. It can be very hard to tell non-sense from critical steps. Kneading the ground beef in meat balls changes the texture. Pressing down calzone makes them fluffier. I didn't know that until I took them out of the recipe. Besure to log your subsequent attempts in your notebook. If skipping a step makes it chewy, it's the only way you'll know.

In parallel, you can also start changing the ingredients. My grandmother's dishes tend to be extremely high in fat. A lot of times, this can be drastically reduced without changing the dish substantially. You can also see if the particular brands they use are better suited to this recipe than others.

The Ultimate Test

The final challenge for your newly transcribed recipe is to make it for them. If it gets the seal of approval, it's a keeper.

Peasant Cooking

Most of the recipes I've tried to capture are peasant dishes made when people had a fair amount of time on their hands. Really, one must have been pretty bored to consider rolling stuff in a cabbage leaf. There are two hallmarks of peasant cooking: intricate steps and long cooking times.

Intricate steps are probably unavoidable. Making cabbage rolls or maccarunë are going to be extremely laborious just because of the effort required to form each one. I try to remind myself that if it was winter in the Ukraine before TV, I'd probably be pretty bored too. That being said, there are cheats. Cabbage roll casserole made like a lasagna tastes pretty much the same and tagliatelle made with a pasta machine are much better than any store bought pasta.

Long slow cooking times are definitely unavoidable. Long slow cooking times are not a product of too much time. They are a necessary way to tenderise meats and extract flavours. Long gentle cooking causes connective tissue in meat to break down. Even though we may have better ingredients now, a long slow cook will always make for more tender meat. It's also important to remember that water is a solvent. Cooking soup for hours is necessary because that is the time needed to extract the flavours from the ingredients. If you want to make things quicker, don't resort to increasing the heat and shortening the cooking time. The answer is more likely in technology. Would it be better in a pressure cooker? slow cooker? Can you make a huge batch and freeze it fully cooked? prepared but uncooked? ingredients prepped? some ingredients? Another technique to note is a braise: a long slow cook just below a simmer. My grandparents always did it on the stove top, which requires constant fussing with the temperature. Instead, you'll probably want to braise in the oven, a slow cooker, or a pressure cooker. If you cook too hot, your dish will never tenderise the same way.

It's also important to understand that somethings have changed. My grandparent cook pork to shoeleather, but their reason was good. When they were growing up, most pigs were fed scraps and the meat was frequently contaminated with trichinosis. Grocery-store pork is fed grain and regulated so it doesn't contain trichinosis, therefore doesn't need to be cooked as much.

Closing

There's a joke I like: A recently married woman makes a ham for her husband. He says that it is fantastic, but asks why she cut the ends off. She replies that her mother made great ham and she always cut the ends off. They call her mother and ask why she cuts the ends of her ham. In turn, she says that her mother made great ham and she always cut the ends off. They then call her grandmother and inquire why she cut the ends of her hams. The grandmother says that she never had a pan big enough.

Good luck!

Microbiology

Sourdough and cheese recipes require some “real” microbiology work. These are derived from laboratory procedures and some laboratory equipment.

Aseptic Technique

Microbiology work requires “aseptic technique” which is a work method to prevent contamination so that only a single microorganism will be cultivated. Proper technique is not possible or necessary in the kitchen. In general, the following must be observed:

Glassware

For yeast, the ideal growing environment is a vented Erlenmeyer flask on a magnetic stirrer. The stirring helps aerate the media as yeast prefer to be oxygenated. If not available, it can be skipped, but the flask should be swirled occasionally. Special vented caps are available to allow air to flow into the flask but prevent dust from contaminating the culture. If not available, cover with a piece of aluminium foil. If an Erlenmeyer flask is not available, use any glass vessel with a narrow neck.

For cheese, the ideal growing environment is a sealed Erlenmeyer flask. If on a magnetic stirrer, soft cheeses like Quark (See page 52) will be smoother. If this is not available, run the final product through a blender to remove any crystalline lumps. If a stoppered flask is not available, any clear sealed glass container will work. Beware of odour transfer between the cheese and the rubber seal of a jar.

- Clear all equipment thoroughly before using. Do not use soap unless needed and rinse extremely thoroughly.
- Sterilise items by processing in a covered water bath for at least 30 minutes.

- Items which are coming in direct contact with media can be quickly sterilised by dipping in alcohol and then being lit. Allow to cool momentarily before touching living cells.
- Do not let equipment, especially the insides caps and stoppers, contact the counter.
- Work quickly.
- The major source of contamination is you. Do not allow a surface you have touched to contact a clean surface.

Osmotolerant Yeast

From Andre Masella.

Ingredients:

- fresh yeast
- malt extract
- water
- Epsom salts
- alcohol

1. Prepare a flask of malt extract media.
2. Cut a cube of fresh yeast.
3. Quickly dip in alcohol.
4. Ignite yeast cube.
5. Drop yeast into flask.
6. Gently mix on a magnetic stirrer until the mixture is opaque and looks like chocolate milk. Approximately 4 days.
7. Prepare another flask of malt extract media with 2 g Epsom salts.

8. Using a sterile stick, transfer a drop from old flask to fresh flask.
9. Discard contents of old flask.
10. Gently mix on a magnetic stirrer until the mixture is opaque and looks like chocolate milk. Approximately 4 days.
11. Repeat last 3 steps using 4 g, 7 g, then 10 g Epsom salts.
12. Make Frozen Stock (See page 236) .
13. If desired, use remaining culture for Pandoro (See page 203) .

Malt Extract Media

Ingredients:

- 15 g malt extract
- 125 g water

1. Combine all ingredients and a magnetic bead in a vented 250 mL Erlenmeyer flask.
2. Boil flask in a covered water bath for 45 minutes.
3. Chill to room temperature.

Frozen Stock

“Culture” is media that has microorganisms grown in it (e.g., yeast grown in malt extract media grown for several days, store-bought buttermilk, store-bought live yogurt)

Ingredients:

- 1 mL glycerol
- 5 mL culture
- screw-cap 7 mL tube, rinsed and allowed to air-dry

1. Add glycerol to the tube.
2. Place the cap on loosely.
3. Sterilise the tube.
4. Let tube cool.
5. Add culture.
6. Tightly seal the tube.
7. Shake vigorously.
8. Label glass with a magic marker.
9. Cover writing with clear tape.
10. Place at the back of a very cold deep freezer.

Inoculating from frozen stock:

1. Prepare fresh culture media in a flask.
2. Sterilise a metal or wooden stick. A skewer or tooth-pick works well.
3. Take the media to the freezer.
4. Open the tube and scrape some ice.
5. Return the tube to the freezer.
6. Remove the lid of the flask.
7. Tilt the flask so the media can be reached with the stick.
8. Swirl the stick in the media against the side of the flask.
9. Replace the lid of the flask.

The frozen stocks do not like to be thawed. Keep them as cold as possible (lab freezer are usually -80 °C) and do not allow them to warm.

A frozen stock has a limited life span depending on how cold the freezer is. If you find that the resulting culture is taking too long to grow, make a fresh stock and discard the old one.
